Farm and Konschold

Farmers Economizing Time. Of all the industrial parants in which any population are occupied, nous suffers so majorially from mismanagement and waste of time as farming. Almost all other estlings have an unvaried routine, and the summer or winter, warm or cold. Not so with one who cultivates the soil. No "tenhour" system can succeed on the farm, in the long summer days, when every hour counts, and when the farmer feels that "fine is money." When the foul weed and tenacious grasses are doing their utmost under a hot sun, to dispute with the cultivated crops, the peacession of the rich soll—when the ripened harvest and the new mode hay are waiting to be housed, and the farmer, the successful farmer, lines the day nonected long "from sun to sun."

standing, the most independent, the most free of any among us. And this very freedom, may easily, may often does, work his failure. If you go among the farmers in the winter season, you will find they have planty of leisure. True, they have their threshing to attend to, their word to cut, and perhaps hay to haul home from distant stacks. But, attending to these at their convenience, much time is frittered away in such a manner as would surely work ruin in any other pursuit. That the farmer should have relaxation from his severe lafore is right and proper. And while others have their recreations mostly in midsum-mer, he must take his in winter. But reereation and reasonable enjoyment are no waste of time. What we refer to is spend ing the days, whole days and hulf days, trequently without any forethought or plin, and producing no tangible result. If any farmer will make a good record at the close of each day during the winter, of the probable neft results of the day, he will be surprised to find how much he is losing from mere want of forethought and plan. We would have our farmers remumber that time is money, not only in summer but in just as systematically as the harvests are gathered in summer. Swamp lands to be cleared up ; bo time but winter is fit for this. Fuel to be prepared and stored to last until mother winter. Fencing mate rials to be prepared and distributed, ready for the opening spring. Supplies of any, and ail kinds, wherewith to replonish the manure heap, the stable and the pig-sty. There are few farms where the materials for the manure and compost heap may not be had in abundance for the mere hanling; and every load will make a return in gold. These things should be attended to now, in the winter. And they should be attended to systematically. Of all occupations, that of the farmer requires the most rigid adherence to rule; and this rule should be frequently; their pores are liable to be stopped up by dirt, which must be washed off once a week. Tepid water is the best, and if they are very dirty, weak soap-suds are the best. But nover wet the flowers of are the best. But never wetthe flowers of a plant—water always injures them; nor allow drops of water to stand on the leaves in the suashine. Let watering always be done with a fine-nosed watering pot; where a pitcher or cup is used, it is liable to disturb the earth about the roots. Let it be done regularly once a day, and in the morning; and let the temperature of the water be the same as that of the atmosphere of the room. Neither let the soil become perfectly dry nor sodden with moisture. Use the common flower-pat; light colored ones are the best, being more porous than the dark ones. Discard all glazard china class are the best, being more porous than the dark ones. Discard all glazed, chino, glass or fancy-painted pols, unless to set the cearthenware ones inside of. In planting, always fill an inch of the pot with broken pulsherds to secure draininge; than fill the earth firmly, and securely establish the plant. Plants should always be reported when their roots touch the bottom or sides. In reputting always use frush, rich soil.
